Every day, an estimated 400 gallons of blood filters through our kidneys for removal of metabolic waste, so it's not surprising why urinary tract infections, or UTI's, are the second-most common infection, sending over 8 million of us to the doctor every year.

Medical experts agree that the standard treatment of antibiotics can create resistant bacterial strains, possibly worsening the condition in the long-run. To reduce the risk of UTI's, drink plenty of pure water and limit use of alcohol, sodas, coffee and sugar.

D-Mannose, the active ingredient in cranberries in a concentrated form, has been shown to be as much as 50 times more effective than just cranberry juice alone in preventing and treating UTI's. Without disrupting the flora balance, like antibiotics, D-Mannose helps to support and protect the urinary tract by attracting and expelling infection-causing bacteria. It's available in capsules, powder or liquid.
